

A Drop of Urban Green

RHS Tatton Park Show Garden

Hosta Consulting exhibited their first ever show garden at this year's RHS Tatton Park 2016. The garden was awarded a gold medal and best in category. 'A Drop of Urban Green' imagined a small unused space within a city transformed into an urban pocket park, with the aim to provide an area to relax and increase biodiversity within the hustle and bustle of the city.

Specially commissioned, a poem by Nottingham's Ben Norris weaved through the garden complimenting the planting and invoking questions about our relationship with nature. The poem also celebrates Nottingham's UNESCO World City of Literature status.

The use of reclaimed materials to construct the pocket park aimed to limit the garden's environmental impact, whilst allowing it to become an amalgamation of the city it sits within. The garden has now been deconstructed and 'A Drop of Urban Green' will be relocated back to Nottingham as part of Nottingham City Homes' Decent Neighbourhood scheme.
